FACADE OF HIGH SCHOOL

What Pittsfield Has Done for Me

(Maplewood Prize Essay)

WHETHER one is an Owen D. Young and donates to his native village a fine school in appreciation, or whether one is only a student and merely writing his thanks, almost everyone has a sense of gratitude toward his home town for what it has contributed to his success and happiness. I cherish a great affection for my city, feeling that I owe it much; and I shall endeavor to tell a little of what my town has done for me and some of the causes of my attachment to it.

Undoubtedly, one of the reasons for Pittsfield's endearing herself to me is that she has been my home since I was three years old; and, therefore, this city is the scene for all those happy memories which cluster around one's childhood. It was here that I first experienced the joy of rolling down a sand bank, an undiluted joy because I was still far from that age of discretion when one looks and thinks of ruined rompers before leaping into a gravel pit. At this period, although I was not cognizant of the fact, Pittsfield was in the midst of a housing shortage and this very excavation for foundation stone was indicative of growth for my new home town. It seems in retrospect that that large digging was symbolic of my present impression of Pittsfield as a city of homes, and also of my conviction that a city of homes is a truly good city, and that it is the people who make houses into homes who give a city like Pittsfield its stability and charm. I know that Pittsfield has done me a great service by bringing about this realization, which is a cornerstone of good citizenship.

During these years I did not attend Pittsfield's public schools, but was taught at home, ignorant of what lessons in life I was missing. At last, however, I did enter the last year of junior high school, and I began immediately to receive the benefits of a public school education. I had to adjust myself to the class competition, the stricter discipline, and above all to conducting successfully my relations with others. This last is an invaluable training, priceless because of its universal necessity, and there is no better place to learn it than in school. In high school, my association with wise and understanding teachers, who knew how to build on fundamentals, emphasized the need for independent thinking as an integral part of good citizenship. Thus Pittsfield's schools have inculcated in me the principles which produce good citizens; for is it not true that to be able to understand and co-operate with people, and to know and obey the laws of the city, state, and nation is of prime importance in attaining this end?

To imagine Longfellow ascending the great staircase of the Appleton residence, hearing the old clock ticking its

"For ever—never!

Never—for ever!";

to picture Herman Melville comfortably settled before his hospitable hearth at "Arrowhead", conceiving the beloved "Moby Dick"; to visualize Oliver Wendell Holmes sitting in his tiny study on Holmes Road, chuckling over some clever bit in his "Professor at the Breakfast Table", or delighting some of his chosen friends with his brilliant repartee—these are the scenes which visits to Pittsfield's literary shrines have conjured up in my mind. Such touches help to make real for me the great men who before seemed semi-legendary, and thus my appreciation and enjoyment of their work has been immeasurably enhanced.

Pittsfield has most that can be desired for aesthetic pleasure, for her wonderful museum and athenaeum promote interest in intellectual activities, and close association with her natural beauties develops a boundless enthusiasm for Nature. The classes at the museum gave me my first close glimpses into this realm, and the lore of birds and flowers that I gained there has heightened my perception of Nature's grander creations. The ever-changing tempo of the pageant of the seasons brings forth surpassingly lovely scenes, each seeming lovelier than the previous one, but it is autumn in Pittsfield that has shown me Nature in all her glory. Here the words of the Kansas poet are even truer than in his native state: "Some call it Autumn, others call it God." I revel in leaves of every hue—flaming scarlet, brilliant orange, vivid yellow, rich russet, splashing the forests with a riot of color. The far-off landscape is blue with the pungent smoke of wood fires, as if Nature were worshipping at her woodland altars, while near at hand Indian Summer pours over everything its shimmering haze, as thick and yellow as molten gold. Back of all, in silent grandeur stand the everlasting "hills of home". Truly here is splendor in abundance to satisfy those who love God's out-of-doors.

Pittsfield justly deserves all this praise, and who would not count himself favored to live in a city that has so much to offer? Although I am not a native of this community, I consider myself fortunate indeed, to have had the advantage of growing up in Pittsfield.

For all your days prepare,

And meet them ever alike:

When you are the anvil, bear—

When you are the hammer, strike.

Prophecy—Class of June 1933

ONE day while touring through some of the picturesque side roads in which our beautiful Berkshire Hills abound, my party stopped for a wayside lunch at a very cold spring located in what is known as Wizard's Glen. I was wandering some distance away from the road in search of wild flowers among the rocks and crags, heaped about in wild disorder as if strewn by giant hands, when a terrific thunder storm broke with such suddenness that I was forced to seek shelter. Fortunately, I spied at a short distance a hut, which I supposed from its appearance, was deserted. But upon opening the door I was astonished to see a wizened, gray-haired man puttering with some retorts which cluttered the small room. He paid not the slightest attention to me except to say,

"Come in and close the door."

Somewhat embarrassed at his lack of hospitality, I finally remarked upon the sharpness of the lightning flashes and the almost immediate detonation of thunder. At this remark he glanced keenly at me and then fired a swift volley of questions concerning the velocity of different waves, such as those of light and sound. Eventually he became quite communicative and told me of some startling discoveries he had made in the realm of science. The most interesting was a liquid which emitted peculiar rays similar to and yet almost infinitely swifter than the rays of light. So rapidly would its rays travel that an image formed on the retina of the eye through the medium of this ray would be presented to the brain fifteen years sooner than the image produced by the light ray. By means of this discovery I was able to see things which you will see fifteen years hence. I divided the contents of this vial into equal parts, using one part for each of my classmates so that I might tell them at this time their station in life in 1948.

First I saw people in far distant lands. Diving for pennies thrown by passengers from a steamer into the waters of the harbor of Honolulu, the small, lithe figure of Virginia Lyman astonished my bewildered eyes. Entertaining the Japanese from aboard the S. S. Bluff, Harold Bass, the second Rudy Vallee, with his orchestra composed of George Douillet, the flaming yellow youth who piped accompaniments; George Bower, hat awry, whose attention was upon a young Japanese girl; and Joseph Symanski, master of cymbals. Near at hand was Sidney Zukerman, making the most of his late hours.

It was very surprising to me to notice that so many of my classmates had devoted their lives to entertaining. Among the most renowned actors was Morris Geller, who played the part of Lo, the poor Indian in the great Shakespearian drama, "Mrs. Cabb's of the Wiggage Patch." The three Williamses had become the owners of a colossal conglomeration of pesky performers. John McDermott fed their monkeys, while John Gore and Albert Green spent their time shining elephants' tusks. I noticed an immense throng of people trying to gain admission into a Palace of Dancing whose main attraction was the Cropper-Conant-Christman trio exhibiting the Crab Dance, which required syncopated contortions sideways, forward, and backward at the same time. Disorder at one of the exits of the dancing hall was quelled with an astonishing exhibition of muscular activity on the part of the husky bouncer whom I recognized as Lucy Eulian. Ernestine Ferry kept herself busily engaged in feeding the horses on a merry-go-round. Louise Zahn was an athletic instructor of seals with Marian Ames as her model. On the legitimate stage our class was represented by Harold Ross, playing the role of Hamlet as he chewed gum and pulled the curtains. Anna Berte outdid herself as Anna, Dido's sister. Sylvia Hendricks was still casting her coy glances at John Hindle. Ray Herbert was their efficient promoter. Helen Chamberlain was featured as a blues-singer on Duke Milne's radio program. Robert Boos, the modern Rubinoff, skilfully imitated Jean Wachtel's giggling with his violin. Marjorie Butler was giving a lecture on proper posture to a group of physical educational teachers—Concetta Campagna, Constance Camp, and Theresa Cazavelan. Clifford Chapman, Camille Jacobs, and Adalard Desmarais were engaged in conversation about Richmond's milk supply, while over in the corner Eda Jacobs recorded their famous words. Mildred Beck and Esther Hermance were stenographers for a large law office in New York, while Alice Griffin and Elizabeth Higgins dusted their weighty volumes of knowledge. Mary Hill and Lillian Brier were their consultants.

Dorothy-Alice Dresser was the suave young mistress of a boarding school for spoiled children. Many of her best teachers are my former classmates. Helen Kellogg was teaching ornithology, specializing in the habits and customs of large birds. Margaret Whitney was a prim etymologist who delved deep into the square roots of Arabic and Egyptian dialects. Marian Gill taught the poor children how to swallow Latin without molasses. Barbara Lentz taught whistling and the art of senseless interrogation. Robert Squires was the dancing teacher; Julia Strauss, Gladys Tukey, and Sally Urban were his charming assistants.

Walter Vincent had perfected his labor-saving gum device and was assisted in putting it on the market by Beatrice Varcoe, Gerry Wheeler, Hugh Quirk and Eva Vincent. Carolyn Wilbrant and Grace Young were showing such efficient teachers as Etta Powell, Mildred Pincus, Louise Peacock, and Marie Waters how to take fifty words a minute. John Patrick Kelly made a good mayor. George Kellar was his chief of police; and while their husbands kept house, Ruth Zalutsky, Pauline Zagarowski, Eugenia Querico, and Sue Ricci helped Kellar lead misinformed school-children to lunch.

Among the successful merchants of the day were Leslie Ahlen, A. Eramo, William Kirchner, who owned an immense furniture store. They sold on the installment plan matrimonial bureaus, mountain springs, garden beds, and multiplication tables. Mary Stone and Mary Havey were the proprietors of a large chain of eating houses specializing in vegetable soup. William Fahey and Arthur Levy were other classmates who utilized their time. They preached on Sundays and conducted a shoe repair shop on week days, thus spending all their time mending souls. Dorothy and Mabel Gilbert were managing a beauty parlor for long-haired poodles. Habib Haddad was selling Oriental rugs to two buxom young maids, Kathleen Costello and Helen Pryce. Geraldine Smith, Beatrice Zwinklestein, Mabel Bastow and Muriel Sherman conducted a quaint old book shop. Carl Wilde, with his flashing smile, was the manager of a chain store grocery system. Lucile White was his chief cashier. Delmont Tufts supplied many a home with his dairy products, and William Scace, a modern young farmer, was teaching Warren Alexander and Ralph Decelles how to hoe potatoes. Catherine Kendall was a blissful farmerette in the West. Lucille Loehr, Alice Laboda, and Mary Lennon helped her run to seed. Sophie Wolak and Elizabeth Kelly were leaders of a touring gym team whose other star performers were Sara Kruger, Katherine Kinnifick, and Ruth Kaplan. Dorothy Wild, our old toothpick, was still searching the country for her nameless one.

The class was well represented in journalistic fields. Miriam Mirmow, a column writer, was astounding the world with her views on "Tonics for Tired Teachers" and "Teach Not Lest Ye Be Taught." Walter Murphy, the Monday morning quarterback, was idolized by small boys for his clever sports column. Ruth Cohen had fulfilled the prophecy of her childhood. In addition to being a grand opera singer she was also an excellent fish merchant. She used scales in both occupations. Luther Burbank had worthy successors in George Duprey, Sam Candilore, Michael Calderella, and Richard Bailey who had succeeded in developing new varieties of odorless onions, huskless corn, and blind potatoes. Adolphe Donati was an importer of green olives and pithless oranges. His contact men, Robert Frisch and Lawrence Barker, were indispensable to him. Joseph Keegan, Charles Clarke, Josephine George, Margaret Cullen, Richert Arzt, Arthur Lefebvre, Marian Ford, and Doris Crown were still searching for Nature's remedy for short people. Maybe they found it among themselves. Jack Roser was patiently teaching Ruth Card to climb a ladder. Jean Roser and her Red Sister, little Lucy Lyons, were playing Lady Bountiful to the children of Chicago. Robert Finklestein, master mind, was still arguing that the way to cure the depression was biologically to revolutionize the human race. Leslie Chapman operated a mechanical robot that explained to me how Esther Cutler and Angelina D'Agostino were drying hops. Howard Gaston was a high powered salesman, whose efforts to sell Ella Borkowski and Rose Bilotta an Austin car had proved unsuccessful, so he was persuading Dorothy Armstrong, capable young housewife, that her kitchen needed a new rug.

The magnificent Waldorf-Astoria had been leased by a syndicate consisting of Charles Allegrone, Marcus Blanchard, and Warner Buckley, whose purpose it was to emphasize the beauty of the female of the species. One floor of this once famous hotel was given over to a beauty parlor supervised by Rosalie Dalton, Alma Daoust, and Vera Billman, who personally demonstrated the possibilities of beauty without a make-up. Another floor was devoted to a hair-dressing emporium superintended by Ruth Lifvergren who had been given a Congressional medal for abolishing the style of bobbed hair. In the upper part of the building there was a radio station operated by Dino Leoncini, Joseph Horrigan, and Norman Hildreth, by which constant communication was held with Paris, whereby Bernadette Mensky, Antoinette Meunier, Helen Boyd, and Louise Tower were enabled to demonstrate the latest styles. The roof of the building was used as a summer resort for spinsters. There I saw Margaret Atkinson and Mary Cassidy. Employed as maids in an old ladies' home were Olive Fish, Clementine Forni, Dorothy Fentner, Theresa Edda and Clara Dietz. As floor-walkers in this same home, Carl Yon and Allison Gregory were inspiring successes. Virginia Brinton was the owner of an airfield. Her pilots, William Toner, Joseph Servis, Louis Spiewak, and William Tatro, defied death daily in their attempt to please their chief.

When I looked off in another direction I saw Albert Pritchard addressing an assembly of eminent scientists, (Frank Adams, Lawrence Fairfield and John Flynn were keen listeners) on the subject "The Nothingness of Animal Matter." At the close of his speech he announced that the next lecture would be given by Ruth Boutwell on "The Possibilities of the Production of Holeless Hose Without the Use of Profanity." I wanted to hear this lecture as I remembered that Ruth's chief amusement was "darning." Among the crowd of spectators at the meeting I espied Dorothea Foley, who, appearing in a ray of hope, started on a train of thought, was borne aloft by a wave of merriment and, swept by a gush of applause, alighted in a gale of laughter. Kenneth Roberts, the modern Ben Bernie, and all his lassies, Catherine Seckler, Doris Reynolds, Beryl Shepard, and Brunina Sibbio were merry-makers in a fine orchestra. Virginia Small and Aldan Salak helped them by rubbing boards, and Dorothy Johnson beat time. Members of the cosmopolitan "Hobby and Indoor Sports Club" were Michael and Walter Spasck, Sidney Jaffe, Harold Jaffe and Mario Ochiano. Kenneth Sedgwick was a breeder of red-ribboned dogs and Marjorie Blair and Allene Bassett offered him competition by decorating cats with purple ribbons.

Halfway down a village street lived Mary Gross; a placid young housewife who was chatting over her garden fence with the docile matron, who had been Marguerite Newton. Carolyn Cozzio, Lucile Sanford, Margaret O'Neil, and Rita Farley were members of a get-together gossip club which met to discuss the preposterous antics of the younger generation. They were much shocked by the news that Esther Duker and her sister Hilda had been nominated for public offices on the Socialist ticket. The Dukers were aided in gaining this honor by Dorothy Haskell and Bernice Becker, prominent members of the women's trade union. Edward Carroll, having suffered the inadequacy of Muzzey, was writing a volume of history; Charles Chiaretto was his date-setter. Dan Collins was winner of the Lebanon Ski Meet. Harold Mela was a close runner-up for the day's honors. Marian Bernardo had just been elected president of the A. P. syndicate. In his office I saw Harold Burch, talking himself out of a job. Robert Buckwalter was the captain of the S. S. Leahy; Milton Discoe was his chief steward. Doris Drake had recently painted a picture of Marjorie Forbes for the back cover of a magazine published jointly by Serena Brandon and Melana Barzottini. On Pittsfield's All Berkshire Baseball Team, Raymond Goodrich, Paul Froio, and Carl Hourihan were aided by Fred Fuhlbrigge's ten cents worth. Mildred and Alma Griffin made charming hello girls in a rural telephone office. Evelyn Hart and Laura Galimberti were candidates for president of the "Woman's Chatterbox Club." Each candidate was well qualified for the position. Wesley Jones and David Kennedy were at the Hinsdale Golf Club, showing Virginia Goddard how to putt. Helen Mandell, sitting at her desk in New York, was welcoming Doris Martin, Ruth Sawyer, and Sylvia Kruss back from the sunny South where they had gone to acquire a southern accent.

Keith Signor and Richard DeWitt were still wandering the globe in search of the girls who were graduated from P. H. S. a half year before them.

Betty Miller, Alice Bodig, and Margaretta Boland were the class representatives in the faculty of Pittsfield High School. Ethel Miner with her jolly troupe, Lillian Londergan, Hilda McAvoy, Phyllis Parish and Mildred Persip were on the road in an attempt to sell shoes and thimbles to tired mothers. Eleanor Palmer was an efficient, poised, stenographer in the office of Paul Sullivan, famous cigarette salesman. Pete Masino provided Sullivan with the where-withal of his tobacco seed. Nicholas Mele and Milton Mead were jolly, carefree sailors on a South Sea cruise where Gordon Smith had advised them to go.

Walter Naprava and Robert Mercure were anxious to be off with them, but domestic duties prevented their breaking the home ties. Alice Perry had wandered off to the North Pole and found comfort in the icicles. Lawrence Ramsay was a boxer whose leading opponent was Vadislav Radgowski. Laura Dastoli and Edna Dakin were enjoying the summer's vacation in Europe while Katherine Conroy and Eva Cooper were in China. Ethel Molin and Frederick Richardson, together with Dorothy Symes and William Zink were in the Swiss Alps.

Vincent Montsinger and George Murphy ran one of the largest ranches in Montana, stocked with a vast herd of reindeer with which they were very successful, as they had a contract with the League of Nations to keep Santa Claus supplied with means of transportation. Traveling in state in their private car, Madeline Nagelschmidt, Althea Dorr, and Mary Felter, went about the country establishing agencies for the sale of their patented Einstein curvature spectacles. Mary Callahan was still doing the disappearing act, this time it was to become a technician at St. Luke's Hospital. Marguerite Donna, as Little Buttercup, merrily frolicked up and down the continent. Helen England remained the explanation of where Christian Scheufler planted his cabbages. John Saracco was a successful radio announcer. As I listened, I heard him explaining that Joseph McMahon, noted criminal lawyer, had startled the world again by securing the release of a confessed murderer. Jack Head was a personality man in a New York hotel where William Zink and Milton Discoe kept the dust off the roof gardens. Leah Hooper and Victoria Karpowitz were salesladies in a New York breadline. Fayette Laramee, Robert Fowler, with Carl Glander, Charles Hawley, and Robert Cummings had become master policemen. They guaranteed swift justice to heart-broken young ladies. Esther Samel was still obsessed with her desire to get one of them down cellar. I watched her until at length she succeeded. I was more than surprised to find that her first prey had been Wm. McKenna, who was still muttering incoherently.

In another part of the great city I found Max Lipson in a chemical laboratory. Rodozzio Pedrotti and Arthur Pozetta, his assistants, were helping him exterminate roaches. Buel Dean and Giri Samale were prominent Wall Street brokers who as yet were still broke. William Giesker, as consulting engineer for the General Electric Company, was giving constructive advice to the lovelorn, while Erik Stahl took advantage of the questioners' attitude and clipped their noses. I realized that my portions of the strange liquid were nearly exhausted, but the sight of the Junoesque form of Virginia Wilson, silhouetted against the Berkshire sunset made me want the liquid to last forever. One of the last rays showed me Charles Sayles had succeeded in his matrimonial venture and that Harrison Schlater, the fastest man, was still beating time, but now in an orchestra. With the last portion of the liquid I was able to get only a hazy view of our class president, Albert Lucas, sitting on the familiar steps of old Pittsfield High vainly trying to grasp the hand of an elderly teacher. Who the teacher was, I was unable to discern.

At the first opportunity I revisited Wizard's Glen to see if I could get some more of this mysterious solution, but all traces of the scientist had vanished.

Class History

IT was a memorable day for Pittsfield High School when the present graduating class entered as sophomores. No doubt the seniors were amazed to see such an intelligent, good looking class of students.

On this memorable September 5, we assembled in the beautiful, spacious auditorium of the old Pittsfield High School to receive instructions from our principal, Mr. Strout. As we filed out of the auditorium in perfect order, we could not help but catch the admiring glances bestowed on us by our new teachers and by our principal.

Time rolls around as it has a habit of doing, and soon we were installed as juniors in the new high school. We were undaunted by the trials and tribulations which we had experienced. The difficult task of electing officers confronted us; difficult because out of a class of so many intelligent, capable students it was almost impossible to choose those whom we thought most intelligent and capable to guide us in all our activities. However after due nominating and balloting, the following were elected: Joseph McMahon, president; Zelina Ziskind, vice president; Norman Hildreth, secretary; Ruth Boutwell, treasurer. An able adviser was needed and the class was fortunate enough to secure for that position none other than Mr. John Patrick Leahy. With such an adviser and such a competent staff of officers, we were sure to accomplish much.

The principal activity of our junior year was the Junior Prom. A chairman was elected for each committee and he in turn selected members to serve on it. Without any exaggeration, we can say that the Junior Prom of that year was one of the greatest ever put on in Pittsfield High. The success of the Prom was due to the industrious labors of the class.

At the beginning of the term of September 1932, Pittsfield High School found itself in possession of a class of such sophisticated seniors as it had never hoped to possess. The new sophomores looked up at us as though we were superior beings and the junior class were proud of us and looked upon us as an example of what students should be.

The coming elections were among the first of our senior activities that occupied our minds. As in our junior year we tried to choose our best. We believed we had found this in Albert Lucas, Gero Samale, Esther Cutler, and Lucy Eulian who were chosen, president, vice president, secretary and treasurer respectively. A committee was formed to select, order, and distribute the class rings. In spite of its many activities this class was not the type to neglect its studies. On the contrary it worked with great zeal and interest and before we realized it the time was at hand for the senior play tryouts. The result of the tryout was the selection by Miss Kelly, of John Hindle and Sylvia Hendricks as leading characters of the play. A cast of hard working, dependable students was chosen.

The school has something to remember the senior class of 1933 by. Miss Kelly turned out one of the best plays ever presented by a graduating class. Credit is not only due to the hard labor of the cast but to the wonderful supervision of Miss Kelly.

And so humble sophomores, more sophisticated juniors, and dear successors we, the Senior Class of 1933, do, on this fourteenth day of June, in the year of our Lord 1933, bid you goodbye.

Last Will and Testament of the Class of 1933

WE, the unparalleled class of '33, realizing the dignity of our advancing years, do hereby esteem ourselves prepared for the stupendous undertaking of drawing up our last will and testament.

To Mr. Strout and the faculty, our profound gratitude for whatever knowledge we may have unconsciously absorbed "through the pores."

To Mr. Ford, a pair of horse blinders so that he will not be able in the future to see and reprimand anyone making heroic efforts to reach his class on time.

To Miss Davison, two unsuspecting sophomores whom she may dissect in her biology experiments.

To Mr. Nugent, a can of "Plastic Wood" to fill in the dents left in his floor by Bob Squires' heel-plates.

To Mr. Joyce, a study hall of good-looking and appreciative girls to whom he may expound at length upon his hair-breadth escapes from the snarls of matrimony.

To Miss Mangan, an electrical transcription of her filing course so that she can get more work done in the duplicating room.

To Miss Hodges, a study hall that will give her her turn to talk.

To Miss Downs, some contraption to scoop up her classes and get them to her room on time.

To Mr. Leahy, our adviser, a private golf course so that he can recuperate over week-ends from the strain of guiding the Senior A class on the straight and narrow path.

To some athletically minded soph, the Purple and White Thunderbolt Haddad's prowess, strength, and versatility so that Coach Stewart may have a tackling dummy and shining light of the team.

To the Senior B's, the exclusive right to teach the Junior A's, when the spirit moves them, in ten easy lessons or money cheerfully refunded, ways and means of evading Mr. Murray's "hows, whens, wheres, and whatfors."

To future English classes, the power to turn in a paper which Miss Morris can pronounce "Verry, verry fair—and cloudy."

To the janitors, a set of pen-knives to while away the tedious hours from 7 to 4.30 in whittling off the gum with which we so thoughtlessly covered every available space.

To future gym classes, a new type of uniform consisting of black sneaks, long black cotton stockings, black sateen suits with long sleeves and voluminous knee-length bloomers, with which they may face, without qualms, the scrutinizing gaze of the neighborhood.

I, Esther Duker, well-known soap-box orator, do bequeath the symbol of my office, guaranteed not to cave in during a speech, to Sol Gruner, who more than qualifies for the position.

With tears in my eyes, I, Harrison (Ratsy) Sclater, leave my beloved chisel to my most worthy successor, Stu Cosgriff.

I, Lucy Eulian, leave to the Senior B class treasurer, Marjorie Nichols, a big stick, which should remind Miss Prediger's history students of Teddy Roosevelt's well known slogan, "step softly and carry a BIG stick"; which stick she may use to replenish the class treasury.

I, Lawrence Barker, to some drab but desirous undergraduate, my undulating tresses,

We, Marion Gill and Robert Finkelstein, to Gracie Gilmore and Fred Ferris, our conscientiousness.

I, Duke Milne, to Gilman Whitney, my classroom technique, commonly known as bluffing.

I, Teddy Cazevalan, to Isabella Lehmann, my resounding teddy-bear cackle, that she may surely receive 4's on her report card.

I, Joseph McMahon, to Miss Casey, my perpetual supply of Wrigley's, and to Miss Kaliher, seven minutes of my time in which she may apologize.

I, Beatrice Varcoe, to any who need it, my appealing wholesomeness.

I, Paul Sullivan, to Lester Balmer, my cap and gown.

I, Lucy Eulian, to Ida Lightman, my telescopic view into the heavens.

We, the undersigned, being of sound mind, do hereby act as witnesses to the Last Will and Testament of the Class of '33.

Then there's Al Gregory who is always ahead of them all—he gets letters from a girl, that contain, besides the usual line—don't-cha-know—a stamped envelope.

And Norm Hildreth has such a drag with the girls, he kisses them and then pushes them away saying they can't have any more ('s fact).

Honor Students

Robert J. Finkelstein, the son of Dr. and Mrs. Nathan Finkelstein of Spadina Parkway, was the recipient of the first honor, while Russell G. Burghardt, the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Burghardt of Bay State Road, won the second honor. These students have thus gained the distinctions of valedictorian and salutatorian, respectively, of a class consisting of two hundred and eighty graduates.

Both Robert Finkelstein and Russell Burghardt have been noted for their consistently outstanding work throughout the years in grammar, junior, and senior high school, the former distinguishing himself in the studies of mathematics, the latter in the study of Latin. Russell Burghardt has also been active in the preparations for the commencement exercises, he is a co-author of the Class Prophecy, he was a member of the Senior A Play Cast, and took part in other extra-curricular subjects.

Robert Finkelstein intends to go to Dartmouth College, for which he had already been selected in his Junior year through his placement on the Junior Selective List of that institution. He will major in mathematical sciences.

Russell Burghardt plans to attend Amherst where he will continue his studies in Latin, and, possibly, other classical courses.

In addition, Mr. Roy M. Strout announced a list of nine students who have attained an average of ninety per cent or more through the three years at high school. They are as follows: Russell Burghardt, Robert Finkelstein, William Geisker, Marion Gill, Virginia Goddard, Joseph McMahon, Miriam Mirmow, Jean Roser, and Margaret Whitney.

The Senior Play

IN "Company's Coming", the play of the Class of 1933, was found one of the most successful comedies in the history of the school. It was a production well adapted to the abilities of the actors, yet filled with brilliant, sparkling humor. The audience of about one thousand was kept at a high pitch of interest throughout the entire performance.

The plot revolved about the Janney's, played by John Hindle and Sylvia Hendricks, who experienced more than one trouble in regard to money as well as honor, and even society. It seems that Mr. Janney was a tennis player and the proud possessor of a tennis trophy upon which he already had two legs; but when the final match was only one day away, he took it into his head to pawn the award. Company was coming and the young wife, who had spent all her money shopping, needed some more to keep up appearances. What could her loving husband do but pawn the cup, for the silver was needed, and they had to have grandfather's watch to keep track of baby's meals, and Mrs. Janney would absolutely not part with her engagement ring? Unfortunately, however, a genial neighbor, borrowed the dress suit in which Janney had deposited the valuable pawn ticket, because he, Mr. Thompson, a man with a party disposition, was wending his way to New York for a week-end of celebration, etc. The plot thickened, the young couple were at their wits' end until Bobby Gordon, a dashing bachelor, played by Joseph McMahon, came to the rescue. He suggested a fake robbery to save Janney's face at the Club, but a real robber became involved in the affair. Naturally complications of every kind arose, more company, committee men, policemen, pawn tickets and even Fuller brushmen appeared to make matters worse. Bobby finally brought the cup back after many futile attempts which seemed to be thwarted by every person who made his entrance. The cup found and Janney recovered, everything was all right, and they lived happily ever after.

The leading characters received a great amount of support, from their maid, Susie, played by Alma Griffen in a convincing manner, likewise Vincent Montsinger, in his roll as Mr. Thompson, and Joseph McMahon, as Bobby, added much to the performance. In fact, the whole cast did the play and itself justice by the wholehearted and exuberant acting. Miss Mary Kelly, the coach, is to be congratulated on the success of the performance.

THE CAST OF THE SENIOR PLAY

Mr. Fields	Erik Stahl
Sergeant	Michael Calderella
Officers	Carl Hourihan
Salesman	John Kellar
Messenger	Norman Hildreth
Stage Manager: Robert Squires	Warner Buckley
Assistant Stage Manager: Kenneth Sedgwick

Play Committee: Class Adviser, John Leahy; Chairman, Harold Burch; Helen England, Lucy Eulian, Paul Froio, Morris Geller, Miriam Mirmow, and Kenneth Sedgwick.

After the play a short dance was held, at which the "Blue Rhythm Boys", directed by Jack Head, provided the music, as they had done between the acts of the performance of "Company's Coming".

Class Day

A CLASS DAY presented in a wholly different and entirely striking manner was the feature of the activities presented by the seniors before their final farewell to the school. First there was a dramatization of the class history in which the following participated: Helen Chamberlin, Michael Calderella, Eric Stahl, Milton Discoe, William McKenna, Albert Lucas, Walter Murphy, Olive Fish, Jack Head, Sylvia Hendricks, Robert Squires, and David Kennedy. These people took the parts of various well-known characters in or about the school to make complete the tableau of the '33 Class. Next on the program was the reading of the class statistics which were received very enthusiastically by the audience. A grand music battle between the two maestros, Jack Head and Duke Milne, and their bands left a strong, if questionably pleasant impression upon the assembly. The last testament of the class, the class will, followed, and as a finale the class song was presented to the public for the first time. Undoubtedly this was an event which will not be duplicated, or even approached, in many a good day.

This class day was the brain-child of Marion Gill and her committee consisting of Jack Head, Walter Vincent, Marie Waters, under the general supervision of Mr. McKenna and Mr. Joyce.

Senior Class Banquet

THE culmination of a successful three years in high school, the banquet of the class of 1933, was held at Heaton Hall in Stockbridge, June 15. It was a pleasant affair filled with the exuberant joy of students throwing off their imagined shackles to step into a new world, and at the same time the presence of regret made itself felt, as it always does when friends part from each other.

Albert Lucas, the popular class president, filled the office of toastmaster, and called first on Mr. Roy M. Strout for a few remarks, then on Mr. John P. Leahy, the class adviser who had done so much to make the '33 Class what it is. Toasts were also made by various members of the graduating group. Joseph McMahon gave the Toast to the Girls, Sylvia Hendricks, the Toast to the Boys; William McKenna, that to the Faculty; and Ruth Boutwell, to the Athletes.

After the banquet, Duke Milne and his band played at the dance, which was open to others than the members of the class. Thus ended the commencement exercises, and they may well be remembered by all who took any part in them, for they marked the successful end of a most successful class.

Remembrance Class Song 1933

Sunset is tinting the world that is blue,
Promising days of a different hue;
Shadows may fall and the darkness draw near;
Hiding and covering all that is dear,
Still there is Pittsfield High in our heart,
Memories, friendships refusing to part.

Beautiful dreams of the future are vast
Friendships and memories made in the past;
Thoughts are reflections of time that is spent,
Colored by sunset of friendship well blent.
Still there is Pittsfield High in our heart
Memories, friendship refusing to part.

Teachers and friends and our classmates will stay
Molded and cut in our hearts from this day,
Faces and souls that inspire and appeal,
Pictures of faith and of courage and of zeal.
Still there is Pittsfield High in our heart,
Memories, friendships refusing to part.

Erik Stahl

"And High School Careers are Far Behind"

"Now very quietly, and rather mournfully,
In clouds of hyacinths the sun retires,
And all the stubble-fields that were so warm to him
Keep but in memory their borrowed fires."

(With apologies to J. C. Squire)

Yes, just a memory or nearly so. For very soon they will receive sheepskins and no longer will "Bud" Ramsey, "Joe" Servis, "All-Berkshire" Kellar and the rest, wear the purple and white colors. Far be it from us to wax sentimental in writing this insignificant article but one can't refrain from recalling those thrilling performances on the gridiron, the basketball court, and the diamond that these now senior A's enacted to the edification of the crowded stands. "Mike" Calderilla's 60-yard run in the Drury clash with the slippery pigskin tucked away carefully in his arms. Ah, that was a game! and "Bud" Ramsey's spectacular defensive strategy in the City Basketball Series. Let us look for a moment at some of the '33 athletes.

As this class murmurs a final farewell to P. H. S., one of the best athletes that ever donned a high school jersey will depart—George Kellar. George, besides being a very capable back on the grid team, heaved the discus and put the shot for Coach Carmody's Harriers. Next, "Joey" McMahon, who made the front page of the Eagle for his roller skating, also managed a few lines on the sporting page for his futile endeavors to book games for the golf team. "Jack" Roser, who is P. H. S.' gift to Bucknell, played hockey and tried to play football.

Joseph Wesley Servis, Jr. rose to dazzling heights teamed with the cool and smooth Ramsey of boxing fame in the backcourt of the '32-'33 season. These two boys were undoubtedly the best pair of defensive men produced during the past several seasons.

Joseph Walton Keegan, the best "Yes" man that Coach Beardsley ever had, deserves a rose for his work as manager and general assistant of several of our squads. "Charlie" Sayles received and deserved his letter for his several years of hard labor on the grid team. Mr. Sayles made a touchdown last fall when he substituted for Gorman and those six points decided the game. Nice work, "Charlie!"

"Ray" Herbert, who has been with us only a short time, was going to be a star pitcher but the age limit rule put a crimp in his plans. "Ray," however, fooled everyone by capturing the leading role in "Company's Coming." And of course, we couldn't think of omitting the name of Mr. Lynch's favorite, "Minuteman" Harold Burch. We don't recall any game which Harold participated in but at least he tried awfully hard for two years. To "Cannonball" Haddad goes the honor of being the team's inspiration.

John Jarvis Head, (Clark to you) was outstanding as a cheer-leader and orchestra conductor, and we must admit, more versed in those lines than as an athlete.

"Bud" Ramsey deserves an orchid for his splendid showing on the basketball court and we must admit, it was his steady and cool voice that brought order out of chaos during many critical moments in last year's and this year's contests. "Bud" was chosen as an All-Berkshire performer.

"Ray" Goodrich, who at first was an insignificant "sub", gave thrilling performances on a number of occasions and revealed himself as a contender for All-Berkshire honors.

Paul Froio played baseball for the first time this year; "Junior" Clarke managed to get in some basketball games and his work was extremely creditable; Ross, Lucas, Fairfield, Stahl, and Head received hockey letters. And before we forget, "Big Bill Tilden" Giesker turned out to be the senior class superior tennis player by his wonderful sets played against such skilled performers as Burnham.

Now just a word about the girls in the graduating class. Without a doubt, "Do-do" Zahn was the outstanding girl athlete. Lou's dazzling personality won hundreds of friends who played with her in the girls' division of the Physical Education Department. "Lou" won high honors during her high school career, being active in baseball, hockey, archery, and basketball. Lucy Eulian played a smooth game of basketball during her senior and junior year, and was a member of squad which captured the school championship in 1932. "Jerry" Smith, Lucile Sanford, Ann Berti, and Ella Borkowski all earned high honors in the 1933 season for their exceptional work on the basketball team.

In closing, we might remark that the participation of girls in competitive athletics during the past several years marks a decided change from the status which the girls have been classified under. Possibly, before many years elapse, the girls of P. H. S. will be allowed to compete with other schools in the county. It is also noticed that it was during the past six semesters that intra-mural sports came into their own. It was due to the untiring efforts of John Carmody that this type of sports was introduced. Coach, the class of 1933 appreciates your efforts and many a long year will pass before we forget your gallant work.

Pittsfield High School, the June class of 1933 reluctantly bids you, adieu!

A Parting Tribute

In looking over the rosters of the athletic teams of the last three years, I cannot but feel that the June Class of 1933 has every right to look back with a feeling of great pride at the athletic record of the school since 1930.

During that time the school has held first of all, the championship of western Massachusetts in football. The city championship in basketball, not only has been brought back to P. H. S. but the feat was repeated the following year with two straight and clean-cut victories. Later, the county championship was taken for the first time in several years by a team from our school. In addition to these outstanding achievements P. H. S. has maintained a good record in baseball, hockey, and track. In establishing this record the members of the class of 1933 were of invaluable assistance.

The class, I feel, was not favored with so-called natural athletes. Instead, many were numbered in its roll who, by hard, conscientious work through their three years, gained the heights. For this your class is to be doubly congratulated. There are various instances of athletes overcoming the many obstacles which faced them in their first two years to win finally, at least one and in some cases two and three varsity letters.

In bidding farewell to the class of 1933, I wish you success. When the fall of 1933 rolls around, I assure you, the loss to the school will be felt.

Signed,

Coach Charles E. Stewart

"The acts we perform today determine what we will be tomorrow."

If the athletes of the class of June 1933 are to be judged by this standard, then they may face the future without fear or trepidation.

In recalling the events of the last few years we find that its members have nobly carried on the traditions of Pittsfield High School. While their records on the athletic field are apparent to anyone, if we use the aims of physical education as criteria, we shall find their accomplishments greatly enhanced.

Certainly they have advanced far along the road toward these aims: (1) A healthy body; (2) A well integrated personality; (3) Ever better thinking in an effort to make life better to live. With the knowledge that they will continue to advance in this contest for a happy life I congratulate the Athletes of June class of 1933 and hope that they will accomplish the great things I have envisioned for them.

John T. Carmody,
Director of Physical Education.

Maplewalnut Sur-Prize Essay—The Hero

ONLY a minute more to play! The thought pounded in his head like the blows of a giant hammer. Two yards to a touchdown and victory. Only two yards, yet it looked an unobtainable distance. His hands were like ice. He shifted his feet nervously and waited for the sharp barking of the signals. If only the school could win! Last year they had failed upon the very brink of victory. Success was in their grasp. Would they win? Vaguely, as in a dream, he heard the starting of a cheer for dear old Pittsfield. He gathered his legs under him for the last great effort. In a flash he had jumped from his seat and was cheering with all his might.

"In Sweden it's different," says Erik Stahl. "Over there Necken is an old god instead of being a social pastime."

* * * *

We shall always remember Bob Finklestein for his kind two line philosophy. To quote: If I got to have trouble, I'd rather have a black cat cross my path than a Mack truck.

* * * *

Lucas: "Have you heard the Tarzan song?"

Samale: "Shoot it."

Lucas: "I'm dancing with Tarzan my eyes."

* * * *

He: "I'm John Adams, I want you to know; the apple of my father's eye!"

She: "Oh, I see, the original Adam's apple! How sweet!"

Carl Yon: "Why's your face so red?"

Miss Cramer: "Cause."

Carl Yon: "Cause why?"

Miss Cramer: "Causemetics."

* * * *

Izzy Green: "What course are you taking next term?"

Pansy Kidney: "The course of least resistance."

* * * *

She (admiring the beautiful necklace): "Oh, William, you dear boy!"

McKenna (sighing inwardly): "Oh, Sylvia, you DEAR girl!!!"

* * * *

Slater: "Ow—I hit my crazy bone!"

Betty (sweetly): "Your head?"

* * * *

Hildreth: "Hey you! Gimme a light."

Hindle: "Gwan. What do you think I am—a firefly?"

* * * *

Have you heard about the fellow who is so law-abiding he is afraid to get married? His girl looks like a million dollars—and he doesn't want to be arrested for hoarding.

* * * *

It is rumored that Scotty Leslie is offering $10.00 to the student whom he succeeds in throwing across the Grand Canyon. (Looka! Looka! Dope Kidney wants to try it).

THE TRAGEDY

Oblivious of her danger, she lay at the end of the long, dimly lighted room.

The heart in her young body, beat serenely, and there was no sign of fear in her liquid eyes.

His wicked, bearded face appeared suddenly at the door, lit with passionate desire. So long she had shunned him, but now she was in his power. He stealthily entered the room. She tried to save herself, but was too late. He carried her limp body down the hallway.

"Mother, Mother, come quickly!!! The cat has caught another mouse."

A School of

Engineering and Science

THE Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute was established at Troy, New York, in 1824, and is the oldest school of engineering and science in the United States. Students have come to it from all of the states and territories of the Union and from thirty-nine foreign countries. At the present time, there are more than 1600 students enrolled at the school.

Four year courses leading to degrees are offered in Civil, Mechanical, Aeronautical, Electrical, Chemical, Industrial and Metallurgical Engineering, in Architecture, and in Business Administration, Physics, Chemistry, and Biology. Graduates of the engineering courses are prepared to take up work in any branch of engineering. Graduates of the course in Architecture are prepared to practice their profession in any of its branches. Graduates of the course in Business Administration are prepared for careers in business or for the study of law. Graduates of the courses in Physics and Chemistry are fitted for research and teaching in these fields, as well as for practice in many branches of applied science. The course in Biology prepares for research and teaching, for work in sanitary engineering and public health, and for the study of medicine and dentistry.

Graduates of any of the above courses may continue their work in the Graduate School of the Institute. The Master's Degree is conferred upon the satisfactory completion of one year's work and the Doctor's Degree for three year's work.

The method of instruction is unique and very thorough, and in all departments the laboratory equipment is unusually complete.

An interesting pamphlet entitled "Life at Rensselaer", also catalogue and other illustrated bulletins may be obtained by applying to the Registrar, Room 008, Pittsburgh Building.

BUILDERS

A rivet, a stone, a brick; one at a time, explains the loftiest buildings and the best builders. It's the same way with Thrift. It means real work and patience perhaps, but the results are more than worth it all.

Build slowly but build securely--if but a dollar at a time.
